MEV, or Miner-Extractable Value, is when miners or bots detect transactions in the mempool and place one with a high gas fee to guarantee that it frontruns the targeted transaction, inflating the value of the asset before they "take back" the transaction and gain from the victim. What if I told you this is a major conspiracy in the crypto industry?

Imagine them as a band of crooks hiding behind vitalik as a trusted, still generally well meaning useful idiot as the figurehead. What he says goes, and is accepted by the community. Very very useful to keep around as a way of getting your ideas through.

Then Dex's. They are now accepted and trusted, established as the zany little guys vs the old cex's.

Eth bad actors discover how profitable MEV is and DEXs provide an open goal to score in. Things run great, more and more people join in until they don't even see it as a bad thing - it's just decentralisation and the future in action. An inevitability, nothing to do with morality. This spreads until even some dex founders have been corrupted enough to keep them on board and keep the party going just as it is going. Don't rock the boat.

But change is in the air. Mev is becoming so rampant people are catching on as it's causing wider ecosystem problems. This threatens your crooked status quo. First you seek to discredit and stop the change, but you're smart and know you won't win in the long run.

So you need to corrupt the change itself. You can't corrupt chainlink, so you need your own chainlink. Why not coopt the dex that you've been running your mev game on for your own ends. Stop them from implementing chainlink, get them to change into your own version of it instead that lets you continue your game.

A corrupted oracle token masquerading as a decentralised alternative to chainlink. Cheaper and less time dependent, it lets you move your MEV game from the base layer into the middle layer and keep the scam going across many more usecases. Fucking perfect.

But imagine it. An established token changing to a completely new usecase - it's preposterous.

Luckily you've got vitalik. Put enough pressure on your useful idiot and he'll suggest it to your pocket DEX. People will beg for it.

Chainlink is actively working on the MEV scam by developing a solution called the FSS, which can fairly order transactions using a decentralized oracle network. This is the reason for their seemingly irrational hatred.

I REALLY respect and like Ari. He's far smarter than I am, I'm more than happy to admit that, but his article on MEV was a miss in my view.

MEV is inevitable in the short term. This is nothing to do with oracles, FFS, vitalik or anyone else. If left ignored arbitrageurs would drive gas prices up and be generally inefficient competing for the opportunities, then eventually the largest mining pools would extract 100% of that value themselves at the expensive of the community. Flashbots democratizes MEV and has some of the brightest and highest integrity people in the space working on it.

I agree with Ari's vision long term, but simply ignoring it and letting the ecosystem suffer huge negative consequences while we wait for a outright "solution" is the wrong idea.

Like I said, genuinely happy to answer any questions as a dev working in the space in something MEV adjacent

I absolutely understand the flashboys, it's hard even to find fault in the conclusions they've reached after they've spent years working in this shithole. But the bottom line is that this IS a corruption of the crypto ideal, of creating a programmatic system with no backdoors that is outside the manipulation of its creators. I don't know if it can be done bros, if humans are capable of making this happen or if we are doomed to corrupting ourselves in the face of the overwhelming worthlessness and destructiveness of our fellow man

Moral bankruptcy.

They are the creation of this clown world.

People with no real value and meaning in their lives.

Sergey may have been working for years like this, and barely managed to survive with the support he got until now.

His attempt at increasing the size of his company may be to counter the current mafia by producing more and becoming more useful.

He increased his media presence this year to obtain more funds and support, but it still fails to get to the level it should have reached when you see multiple scams getting more market cap with vaporware.

We are making fun of him dumping 1.5 million tokens each week to maintain his network, but there is no other way for him to attain his goal and every Link investor is in for a marathon to survive until the end, when the current mafia will be seen for what it is, a naked group of adult sized children.

I never felt like this until now and was happy to invest my paycheck into Link for years, but we may have to increase our support to help Sergey succeed.

Just stating facts.

Why are you working on MEV and what do you hope to achieve with it?

Did you forget why blockchain technology was created in the first place and why Bitcoin was developed?

It was to prevent the bigger players from cheating and printing money and stealing from the normal people, and to create a more fair alternative.

What you are doing by advocating for MEV is to recreate the same sick corrupt society with this new technology.

It will make everything meaningless and a new technology will be developed to fix this issue if you don't fix it.

Look at what Robinhood is doing selling the order information to Citadel front running the retail investors.

MEV is the exact same thing.

The fact that you can't see why it's bad is because you have the same personal development level as a child and don't understand the meaning your life can produce after your death.

It's a long way off and requires buy in at the smart contract level. It's not something people could just flip a switch on now.

My understanding of the approach is your contract will only accept transactions signed by the DON as well as the original sender, the DON then orders these transactions based on what a majority of nodes received first. It makes sense but requires

- 1) DONs to exist
- 2) Them to be secure
- 3) Smart contracts to be rewritten
- 4) People to prefer using contracts with FFS than without.

These are not things that will happen within the next year or two in my view. This is why ignoring MEV or just going "FFS solves this" isn't the right thing to do, all that happens then is two years of network degradation and miners themselves extracting 100% of value.

As explained above it doesn't already exist.

I don't post on reddit, weird cope. I personally dislike hayden, this isn't some frogposters VS the world battle of good/evil, get some perspective. Vitalik was talking about ON CHAIN data. LINK is about taking data from the outside world and putting it on chain. TWAPs or UNIs solution is just nice for data thats on chain anyway. LINK doesn't magically solve a lot of ETHs issues. FFS is ONE POSSIBLE solution to MEV. The reality is there are much easier to implement and effective ones in the short term.

I work in a MEV adjacent thing, don't want to say because doxx but I was naturally drawn to it. Personally just want to achieve optimization of the systems I work on.

Oh cool. Well it's a great job flashbots makes MEV acessible to everyone rather than just miners and is inherently fair isn't it?

>What you are doing by advocating for MEV is to recreate the same sick corrupt society with this new technology.

MEV is fucking INEVITABLE in the short term. It's a inherent property of how blockchains work, ignoring the problem just leads to miners FUCKING you in ways you don't even understand. Flashbots makes this as fair and low impact as possible you fucking retard.

I'll try and be as clear as possible.

There are a few hundred thousand to million dollars per day sitting there in the mempool, waiting for someone to extract them. Someone is going to no matter what any individual or organisation says is morally right. Do you agree on that?

With that as a given, there are a few ways this can happen.

1) People write personal arbitrage bots that send their own transactions to the mempool. These bots bid higher gas than the tx they're frontrunning and there is no co-ordination, so a single tx that can be arbitrated may spawn 10 frontrunning tx's all trying to snatch the profit. This PROVABLY bids up gas prices as more blockspace is taken up by attempts at frontrunning/arb.

2) Miners take full advantage of this. The large pools organize blocks in such a way that they personally extract 100% of available value. They can reorder transactions as they wish and insert their own 0 gas transactions wherever they want. This is 100% extraction, all frontrunning is done by miners and any possible value is given to them.

Or 3, flashbots.

Here YOU (literally you, personally, right now) can participate in searching for MEV. You submit your bundles to miners in a closed auction fashion and they accept the bundle that results in highest profit for them, the remainder of profits go to you. This allows ANYONE to participate AND your arb transactions within the bundle will be 0 gas cost so it does NOT bid up gas prices.

To the following people

42, I've had some great conversations with you in the past and I absolutely agree some prominent figures in the ETH community are retarded and have been provably wrong about LINK. But MEV as it exists right now is really not some attempt at saying "fuck link" or anything, Ari is right in the long term but his ideological opposition to MEV existing doesn't change that doing nothing leads to much worse outcomes in the short term than at least attempting to mitigate the impacts of it and democratize it.

They obviously misunderstand the current situation but these anons are obviously correct long term. The main problem many have here is that the MEV auctions are maybe too lucrative for certain people to stop, let alone the people winning them. These individuals tend to have a lot of influence on development of Ethereum too.

We have things like Chainlinks fair sequence ordering in the future, are we moving in a direction to use it, or are we instead seeing the Ethereum leader trying to distance themselves from Chainlink as much as possible so much so as to ask UNI to literally become an Oracle and completely change rather than just Use Chainlink.

There is a solution to this problem.

The mempool uses fair order sequencing and just uses the blockchain to record the operations. Why are you not trying to solve this problem instead of trying to use a weakness in the system? You chose to work on MEV instead of working on fair sequencing.

Imagine a child is walking outside with a very valuable ring he got as a gift from a now deceased family member.

You see this, realize the value of the ring, think it's a waste to leave it on this defenseless person, and decide to use your gun to rob him because someone else will do it if you don't act first.

You are doing the same thing but think that because you are doing it behind a screen with abstract numbers it make it more acceptable.

Broadly accurate assessment.

The guys working on flashbots are legit some of the most intelligent + ideologically driven people I've ever met, they want NOTHING more than for eth and blockchains generally to be perfectly decentralized and democratized. These guys are REALLY not some rent seeking profit maximisers looking to degrade the experience so they can get rich, half of them don't even participate, they all made it 20x over doing the degenerate types of frontrunning over the past 3 odd years.

>>35158180

It makes SENSE for UNI to have integrated oracles, it's a completely different problem. There is no benefit/need to take uni price data off chain then back on again. LINK is operating on a different problem set, one that there currently isn't that much demand for but I 100% believe there will be in the future.

"The mempool uses fair order sequencing and just uses the blockchain to record the operations."

What you're describing is rebuilding huge parts of how Ethereum works from the ground up. Miners now have to gossip about the order they received transactions in and a transaction can't be included if a majority of nodes hasn't seen it? This isn't a solution or realistic, it would MASSIVELY degrade the performance of ETH and isn't the sort of thing that should be dealt with at the protocol level.

>You chose to work on MEV instead of working on fair sequencing.

You have NO idea what I work on or the applications of it. Not that you're owed it but my work is networking related and likely applicable to FFS in general terms.

>You see this, realize the value of the ring, think it's a waste to leave it on this defenseless person, and decide to use your gun to rob him because someone else will do it if you don't act first.

No, these criminal analogies completely misrepresent the situation.

Imagine there is $100 sitting in a street that is closed off to all except already the already wealthy/well resourced (miners/people with advanced arb bots) The $100 is completely legal to take. Is it somehow LESS moral to open that street to everyone, no matter how little resources?

To be clear, flashbots also allows you to submit tx's directly to miners so they can't be frontrun. You were aware of that right? Or does it go against your "flashbots evil and robbing from us" narrative.

I also think Eric is a fucking moron, he comes across extremely badly. I can't speak for anyone else except myself. I personally disagree with a lot of those guys, based on my conversations most of them just legit don't understand link yet. very few actually hate it, those that do have mostly been pissed off by frogposters who misrepresent stuff so they assume they also misrepresent link to the same degree.

In a no flashbots world you have random individual arbitrageurs submitting tx's for their own profits. Miners here can just say "fuck this" and organize blocks for 100% extracted value, the profit difference is large. In a flashbots world, the profit difference is much smaller so the effort of writing the code to extract value isn't worth it, especially since flashbots has many more ppl working on it that will find new ways of extracting and probably outperform you anyway.

What do you think this changes? Nothing would have been different about this tx had he submitted it to the mempool? Maybe someone would have outbid him on gas but the same attack would have happened regardless.

And they won't have any data because you submit no personal info with your bundles, no API key required.

I was in the other thread and want to drop a bit of context for those who think this thread started at 100mph from the get go - it's continuing from the conclusions arrived at in the last thread.

The question that started it was why on earth vitalik himself was making such a bizarre suggestion directly to UNI. He's asking UNI to change the whole purpose of their token to something outside their area of expertise, despite a project already existing with highly reliable oracles as core business who could do this in a weekend's work. Not only that he is clearly proposing UNI become a direct competitor to this project.

Utterly bizarre. It called to mind last year where successive projects said chainlink was not necessary and their own oracles were fine. Their oracles got exploited, funds gone, if they survived they then moved over to chainlink. First people were sympathetic, but as time wore on and projects continued to actively resist link integration it became a red flag for bad actors seeking to rug their own projects - something you can't do with link. Bad actors.

So what's the rug with eth? Most likely MEV. It could now be so rampant that it is causing wider ecosystem problems such as gas increases, not to mention the degraded retail user experience. For those that benefit from MEV the status quo is good, and it could be that some beneficiaries of MEV are very close to the core development of eth and some DEXs that they are actively influencing the development of these projects for their own benefit. Bad actors.

This has been called out recently, and link offers a solution to it. Some people very knowledgeable in crypto have reacted very negatively to this, which is extremely strange to the point of being suspicious. Whilst resisting it bides time you can reasonably expect that they know MEV in its current form will come to an end.

A while back the term 'Oracle extractable value' was thrown up. Its nonsense when applied to link, but what if the idea stuck?

What if you could take your MEV from the baselayer and build it into the middle layer?

This is where you can theorise this ridiculous out of the blue change your entire usecase suggestion comes in from V to UNI, instead of just using link. If some bad actors were able to bake value extraction tools to a link competitor then you'd not only be able to keep the game going, but expand it.

It's mostly devs not really understanding the problem space and thinking LINK is unreasonably expensive for their use case (mostly correct btw).

UNI's TWAPs are largely fine for purely on chain stuff but I do agree devs NEED to understand exactly what sort of attacks are possible through oracle manipulation and not just integrate external solutions as a black box.

So it's mostly economic and naivety honestly.

??? There are tens of thousands of solidity devs and hundreds of thousands who are familiar enough with it to understand.

Most ETH devs are white hats, I've been in calls when people discovered over $1m of value in an exploitable contract and literally the ONLY thought was how we could safely remove it and return it. The guys working on the protocols people actually use aren't black hatting in their spare time, really.

I'll admit I'm not an expert and just trying to use logic to understand. But even if the miners extract no value at all from these auctions (hard to believe but ok), wouldn't they still be in a position to profit by the nature of their knowledge of the game and their capital? You said yourself they have made it 20 times over so obviously having to bid against others isn't going to necessarily stop them, it just gives the illusion of a more fair system.

Its a Hardfork on ethereum and just like ethererum they are gonna drop tokens to all holders of eth (snapshot taken the 1st of may on block: 1234567), Anon, with your insight in the crypto space do you believe an "litecoin" on ethereum is just a waste of time, effort ?

> They are already PoS

> Airdropping to all eth holders in wallets (snapshot already taken, staked eth will not count) possible the biggest airdrop till date is to be expected.

TLDR: Anon, waste of effort to try to hardfork Ethereum at current stage? Or room enough in defi crypto space?

Yeah it seems fishy.

The market will sort this out sooner or later. The whole reason BSC came into prominence and the BNB pump was to escape ETH, even if it's just a bandaid solution for shit token gamblers. But it exposes the desire for the problems being experienced to be solved which is what Chainlink is bringing to the market. There will be a reckoning for UNI and ultimately for Ethereum as a whole eventually if the "top minds" are committed to being exploitative.

People came to crypto to escape getting Jewed, but these guys are becoming the new jews, so the market will run away again.

Miners do extract value, you offer them profit and they accept the bundle with the highest profit.

You bid for each bundle. Say I've found 7 ETH of profit (extremely high) to extract in a block. I can offer miners any amount up to 6.99.. ETH and still profit. You just include your payment to the miners in the 0 gas tx's inside your block. The capital I have available doesn't matter because I'm bidding out of the arbitrage profits, that's how it democratizes MEV. You literally pay out of the profits. Zero startup capital required.

<https://etherscan.io/tx/0x68aca2290ab2310ed47e126beb5bfa4ab9d6ad1a4d063ab6c9cc62a37180368f>

See this tx's for example. Both 0 gas sandwiching a uniswap buy.

After the 2nd tx he sends 0.111005280056557568 To the miner (babel pool in this case) leaving him with 0.005 ETH profit himself. If you had submitted the same bundle but offered the miner 0.0001 more ETH you'd have made the 0.0049 ETH profit. ($20) checked and ty for the information

my point is yes, that makes flashbots superior to options 1 and 2, but still a subpar solution, and someone not only highlighting the issues with MEV but also offering a solution would still be seen as a threat even if the current fix was ideal at the moment.

I'm not trying to be schizo here, but even if you knew you were probably doing the best with what was available, while still profiting, wouldn't you want the party which offered a true solution that completely removes your profit to let it slide? After all, its not like the average person would ever be aware any of this is going on, and its why we're still probably at least a decade from defi beginning to threaten tradfi.

So chainlink would expose the MEV scam, because it links the assets to the external world. People would be able to see the empty transactions.

But if Vitalik is in bed with the miners, so the merge with beacon chain would never happen, since that would kill mining itself. Unless, of course, the miners are accumulating ETH to stake in the future PoS model and retain their power, while not having costs for electricity.

Again I disagree, if vitalik doesn't do this, retail more or less winds up the same (only a very small percentage ever make money off this shit) while the devs make out like bandits. Instead, retail still ends up being burned by almost the same amount, while the devs get fucked out of massive profits. tokens but he is a legitimate market force. If so many tokens were sent to him everyone involved had this info and were running the risk that vb sells. He has this power because people gave it to him, they sold themselves out.

people sent these tokens to vitalik with the expectation that he wouldn't rug, as a kind of protection he is doing the exact opposite

don't get me wrong, the ignorant desperate and greedy masses are paying the price for this, but to call someone like vitalik based is stupid

No, con artists sent him those tokens with the expectation they could convince their marks he wouldn't rug. There was no coordination on vb's end, they were using him to swindle the people you're claiming deserve protection. Again, chaotic neutral action from vitalik here and I have no issues unless it ends up being proven this is part of some larger PR play (which I'm open to but that's a lot of speculation).

The 1b only has ~40m of liquidity left. His givewell donation is bigger in real terms.

He's not robbing anyone, he's selling tokens tokens are his to sell for literally as good cause as it possibly gets.

I spent two years in the effective altruist community in SF. I dated one for that duration as well. That's why I was so confident this is what it was for. If you haven't spent time with these people you don't get it. This wasn't a pr stunt for him, his reputation has probably suffered as a result. This was about him having the ability to do good and him taking that opportunity.

The gas price is ENTIRELY based on what people are willing to pay. You're not quite getting it. Blockspace is (largely) fixed. Higher gas prices are a RESULT of increased demand for blockspace.

>Just because one person will pay 1000 USD doesn't mean the majority will,

If the cost to be included is $1000 that means that yes, enough people to fill the block are willing to pay $1000.
